The Burton Family Were Residents of This City Many Years Ago

Burton and Ralph Burton; the special event that brought these five brothers together was eight Centin river Louisiana trout, caught and furnished by A. P. Burton.

Amendment Number 20 To Voters November 4

Proposed Amendment Would Provide For Election of the State Highway Commission Instead of Appointment

Editor's Note—This is the second in a series of articles dealing with the nine proposed constitutional amendments and two initiated acts to be voted upon at the general election November 4. The following article deals with Proposed Amendment No. 20.

By HENRY B. DORRIS
Associated Press Staff Writer
LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 6.—(AP)—Proposed Constitutional Amendment No. 20 to be voted upon November 4, providing for election of seven highway commissioners as a substitute for the present appointive commission of five, probably will be the hardest fought of all the measures coming up for action by the people.

Sponsored by Lieut. Governor Lee Cazort at whose direction the nearly 20,000 names were obtained for the petition, Proposed Amendment No. 20 has aroused the opposition of the Democratic state convention, the Republican state executive committee, the Arkansas Real Estate Association, the State Federation of Labor, and a number of other organizations.

Briefly, the proposed amendment would provide that one highway commissioner be elected from each of the seven congressional districts, with each commissioner drawing $2,000 a year salary. In event of the amendment carrying at the November election, the proposal calls for an immediate election, to choose the commissioners who would take office January 1 along with other state officers.

The present commission of five is appointive, having been named by former Governor John E. Martinson in 1927 after the bill bearing his name and the law under which the state undertook its present huge road building program, was enacted. Governor Parnell when he took office continued the commission, and it was a subject for attack by opponents of Governor Parnell during last August's primary campaign. Each Commissioner is appointed for ten years, but the law provided that at the beginning, one commissioner should be appointed for two years, another for four years, and so on, in order that every two years one commissioner's term should expire.

Governor Parnell has taken the stump several times recently in opposition to the proposed amendment, in which he has declared that its adoption would mean disruption of the highway department, cessation in road building for a time, and a great expense to the state.

Like arguments were advanced by the Democratic state convention, and the Republican state executive committee opposed it on the ground that it was "not a political question but one of paramount importance to the entire citizenship of Arkansas."

The Republican committeemen stated it as their belief that all governmental matters requiring special or technical knowledge and training should be in the hands of a commission composed of members of both parties, learned in the affairs they are to administer.

Lieutenant Governor Cazort has planned to wage a fight in behalf of adoption of the proposed amendment, declaring that election of the commission "should be taken back to the people."

Cotton Trade Fair During Last Week

October Contracts Up From 9.66 to 9.77 on Preceding Week

MEMPHIS, Oct. 6.—The weekly cotton review of the Department of Agriculture follows:

The market during the period September 27th to October 3rd witnessed rather erratic price fluctuations with the average of the ten markets for Middling 7-8 inch October 9.77c compared with 9.66c September 26th and 19.05c last year. New October future contracts for the week at New York advanced 9 points to 10.37c at New Orleans 3 points to 10.29c and at Chicago 8 points to 10.44c.

The volume of spot sales as reported by the ten markets was fair, amounting for the week to 336,146 bales, compared with 335,141 bales the past week and 409,802 for the corresponding week a year ago. Total sales in the ten markets to October 3rd this season amounted to 1,612,171 bales, compared with 1,847,780 to the corresponding day the previous season.

Demand both foreign and domestic for American cotton was said to be only fair and from some centers came reports that there seemed to be more willingness on the part of holders to sell more freely than the week before.

Cottons mostly in demand seemed to be in the grades of Middling and Strict Middling in the lengths 7-8 inch up to 1-1/2 inch inclusive.

According to the Weather Bureau during the week ending September 30th there was considerable interruption to cotton picking because of frequent rainfall over much of the belt while temperatures were generally favorable. The export movement so far this season is comparatively heavy, amounting to about 1,300,000 bales to the October 3rd against 1,100,000 for the like period the previous season.

The trade is awaiting with much interest the government cotton crop report which is to be released on October 8 at 11 a. m. Eastern Standard Time.

Grade differences were revised somewhat during the past week and on October 3rd the average for white Strict Low Middling as compiled from the quotations of the ten markets was 69 points off Middling, and for Low Middling 162. Some reports during (Continued On Page Three)

Loss of $2,000 in Haynes Brothers Department Store

Second Store Robbery in Recent Weeks Reported Today

MUCH STOCK TAKEN

Rope in Skylight Stolen From Cook Gin Last Night

Haynes Brothers' department store, one of the largest in this section, was robbed before daylight this morning with a heavy loss of merchandise. Thieves entering from the skylight in the roof ransacked the store, taking in a systematic search of the building. John Haynes estimated the loss at noon Monday to exceed $2,000, although an inventory of the stolen goods had not been completed at that time.

Went Down Rope

Police who followed the proprietors over the building this morning found the rope by which the robbers descended from the skylight to the main floor. The rope was identified during the morning by C. Cook as one that had been stolen last night from Cook's gin.

Another possible "clue" was the discovery of a shirt that had been discarded by one of the thieves for a new one. The shirt bore the trade-mark of the Haynes firm.

The robbers "chased" the knot of the store safe, but were unable to open the strong-box.

Much Merchandise Lost

The identified loss at noon today included 10 expensive men's suits, two women's coats, a great quantity of underwear, dresses, and several suitcases.

Hope police were at work on the case this morning, but the clues were reported very slim.

This is the second mercantile robbery here within two weeks. Recently the store of Ward & Son, Second street, was entered in the same manner—through the skylight—but the thieves got away with only small change which they found in the cash register. The Ward & Son stock was not disturbed in the first robbery.

Haynes Brothers furnished police with a partial inventory and description of the stolen goods at noon today, and it is hoped that the merchandise may be traced here and in neighboring cities.

Rain Blamed For Crash of Dirigible

46 Lose Lives in Crash of World's Largest Bird of the Air

BEAUVAIS, France, Oct. 6.—(AP)—The British airship, R-101, levitating at the air, crashed on a wooded hillside south of here, shortly after two a. m. Sunday, took fire and was destroyed.

Of the 54 passengers aboard 46 either were killed by the impact or burned to death and eight were saved. The passengers killed included the British air minister, Lord Thomson, and the director of commercial aviation, Sir Fefton Branker.

The disaster, the greatest the air has known since the French airship, Dixmude crashed over the Mediterranean with 52 persons aboard in December, 1923, never to return, occurred as the giant ship, the largest in the world and sister to the R-100, which visited America last July, sailed southeastward across France on its maiden voyage of any length, a trip to India and return.

A heavy wind and rainstorm which the airship encountered shortly after it crossed the English channel was believed to account for the disaster. Weighed by the rain the dirigible lost buoyancy and finally bumped into the ground once or twice south of Beauvais. Then it struck a hill-side there, and in 10 seconds had caught fire and was a blazing inferno.

An explosion which occurred immediately after the dirigible plowed into the hill-side rucked the country for miles around and bought peasants running for miles to the place of the disaster. So great was the heat from the blazing ship however that they could do nothing toward rescuing those aboard.

Among the R-101 dead, besides Lord Thomson and Sir Fefton Branker, were Squadron Leader Palstra of the Australian air force, and W. H. L. O'Neill of the British India office. Of the 54 aboard, 12 were passengers, five officers and 37 were members of the ship's crew.

Mr. Domrowski, Tobias, I found this letter I gave you to mail a month ago in your gray coat.

Mr. Domrowski—I remember. I look at that coat at the time to enable you to sew on a button, and it isn't sewn on yet.

Is a New "Boom" Near?

SOMETHING of a sensation was created at the recent meeting of the American Banker's Association when a prominent banking authority, urging a loosening of our immigration laws and a lowering of our tariff, declared bluntly that our standard of living is too high in comparison with the rest of the world, and warned that such a wide discrepancy between conditions here and in other countries could not continue indefinitely.

This gentleman's remedy was a leveling process. America, he asserted, should throw down the barriers and admit a free interchange of goods and people, so that all nations may eventually be on the same level.

Now whether you agree with his remedy or not—and it is quite certain that there are many who do not—his first promise is interesting, by itself. Our living standards undeniably are higher than those of most other countries; and, in the long run, it is quite possible that this difference cannot be maintained. But this does not necessarily mean that our standard must be lowered. Rather it points the way to a new prosperity, world-wide in its scope, more dazzling than anything the world has yet known.

If the American standard of living is to become general all over Europe and in other lands—and for the purposes of this argument it does not matter whether this is accomplished through this banker's program or by some other means—the world consumption of raw materials and manufactured goods is going to take a simply incalculable leap upwards. All markets must, in the nature of things, expand beyond anything we have ever dreamed of. Import and export trade will boom in a manner to make the prosperity of recent years look small.

This is rather a dazzling prospect to look forward to since the whole world just now is gripped by a severe depression. It indicates, however, that this depression must of necessity be short-lived. It is, it may be, that traditional "darkest hour" before dawn. The machinery of mass production, prolific as it is, will be taxed to capacity for years. A long-continued era of prosperity may well be just over the horizon.

When the Strain Tells

GETTING a close-up at President Hoover after more than a year and a half of the presidency constitutes a living proof that the White House is a trying place for a man to live. The president looks older than he did when he went to Washington in the spring of 1929. Like his predecessors, he has found the presidency a job of terrific strain.

All of this, of course, is fairly well known; yet we need to have it impressed on us frequently, so that public sentiment can support the present in his quests for recreation and relaxation. It does not always do that.

President Harding, for instance, was quite widely criticized for spending time on the golf links. There was an utterly unjustified feeling that a president who played golf frequently could not be devoting himself to the duties of his office as he should have. Yet President Harding ultimately died in office, a victim of the strain that the presidency puts on its occupants.

In the same way, President Coolidge was occasionally criticized for his yachting trips in the Mayflower. It was asserted that maintaining this yacht was a useless expense, and that the president should be able to get along without it. But the country ought to be willing to pay a good price for the health of its president, and there is little doubt that the change of scene and relaxation given by those trips on the Mayflower helped Coolidge keep his physical condition at par during his time in the White House.

More recently there have been ill-considered objections to President Hoover's week-end camp on the Rapidan river. They can be answered in the same way. This camp helps the president to meet his onerous duties, and the nation ought to be glad to foot the bill.

There are few jobs on earth more wearing than the job that falls to the president of the United States. No matter how he chooses to find his recreation—on the golf links, on the deck of a yacht, or in a wilderness camp—his fellow-citizens ought not to criticize him. The country is hardly entitled to ask its president to kill himself by overwork.

Sound Advice

OUR good friend Edgar C. Harris of the West Point, Mississippi, Times-Leader shoots a barrage at his state, that might be just as applicable to the great state of Arkansas:

"If Mississippi produces 2,000,000 bales of cotton this year, which nobody believes we will do, the income from this source will be $100,000,000.

"How does this jibe with the figures of the United States Department of Agriculture, which shows that the State imports from other states each year food and feed crops to the value of $168,000,000.

"Can we continue to spend $168,000,000 a year to buy food and feed to produce $100,000,000 worth of cotton?"

"Candidly, we had just as well face the facts.

"We must grow that feed and food at home and plant cotton as a surplus crop. Otherwise, we are headed for bankruptcy."—Morrilton Democrat.

Daily WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON — The George Washington Bicentennial Commission, which is vigorously applying itself to the task of working the country up to a white heat of patriotic emotion by 1932—the 200th anniversary of George's birth—has undertaken an informal compilation of still existing stores, companies or firms which were doing business back in Washington's time.

Apparently there are hundreds of them. Banks, insurance companies, newspapers and drug stores are most numerous among those which the commission has heard about since it sent out a call for information on such institutions.

Already there are a couple of firms which claim to have been established back in the sixteenth or eighteenth centuries. Philadelphia and Boston, thus far, have offered the largest number of interesting exhibits.

Congressman Sol Bloom of New York, an associate director of the commission, suggests that there be some kind of a meeting or organization of old establishments dating back to the eighteenth century and that their records be preserved and examined for their historical value.

Someone will doubtless propose appropriate tablets for such emporiums as can prove that George Washington himself used to be one of the customers. The commission is especially anxious to learn of places where the Father of His Country bought his razor blades, radio tubes, cracked ice, bromo-seltzers, kodak rolls, ginger ale and other day-to-day necessities.

One refers to Leadbeater's drug store, whose ancient records show that Washington and members of his family often sent slaves or came themselves to buy castor oil and other remedies. The Washingtons apparently never ate ham sandwiches and drank ice-cream malted milk over the counter.

Cross Channel By Varied Methods

Crossings Have Been Recorded as Far Back as 55 B. C. Is Claim

LONDON, Oct. 4.—(UP)—Caesar crossed the English Channel in 55 B. C. approximately five hours.

Gertrude Ederle swam the Channel in August, 1929, in 14 hours and 34 minutes.

A regular channel steamer completed the crossing in August, 1929, in 51 minutes and 37 seconds.

Imperial Airways commercial planes during the 1930 season have averaged 12 minutes in actual flying time over the channel.

The above times for channel crossings show what modern transportation has done for man.

Caesar's in his 128 man-oared galley would prove weak competition for Squadron-Leader H. R. D. Waghorn and his championship 1929, 4,000 horsepower Schneider Cup airplane which could complete the crossing in three minutes and 27 seconds.

Caesar left Boulogne following an early luncheon in his galley manned by 64 oars with two men to an oar and with the assistance of three large rafts arrived on the coast of Kent in time for tea—even though there were no board walks upon which to promenade. Waghorn could get across almost between breaths.

No one knows just when the first channel crossing was made. Scientists claim the English channel is comparatively a recent geological formation; they say the land connected between England and the continent was not finally severed until the later part of the Pleistocene period. Prehistoric man may have made love, built his home and hunted where the English channel now cuts England away from the continent.

Since Caesar's first crossing in the summer of 55 B. C., a number of freak crossings have been made. Some of them have advanced safe, adopted transportation methods—there have been attempts similar to flag-pole or tree-sitting and non-stop dancing crazes.

A French engineer, Mathieu, first proposed a channel tunnel. His idea was favorable considered for a time by Napoleon. Since that time dozens of plans such as ferries for whole trains, bridges, high enough to allow any liner to pass under them, tubes resting on the ocean bed, and tunnels under the sea have been suggested.

In August, 1875, Captain Matthew Webb swam the channel in 21 hours and 45 minutes. He was the first person officially reported to cross the channel by swimming from shore to shore. Gertrude Ederle was the first woman to make a successful swimming crossing and her time stood as the record until the German hiker, Hans Vinkler, established the present time of 12 hours and 30 minutes.

In 1785, a Frenchman and an Englishman succeeded in crossing in a balloon.

M. Gleriot, in 1903, inaugurated the swiftest modern method, by flying in a heavier-than-air machine. Another Frenchman, crossed on an ordinary push-bike, equipped with two light floats. The Spaniard, La Cierva, has made several crossings in his windmill-like autogiro.

Another adventurer did the double journey on a motorcycle fitted with floats and propeller gear.

Two Austrian students paddled across in a 14-foot rubber canoe, and another adventure of the same nationality crossed in a collapsible boat. A submarine has done the trip as far as the depth of water would permit. The channel at its mouth, between Ushant and the Sicily Isles, is about 100 fathoms deep, but between Dover and the continent the depth varies from 15 to 60 fathoms.

Society Girl Likes Parachute Jump

Cleveland Girl Learns to Fly and Then Tries Parachute

CLEVELAND, O., Oct. 4.—(UP)—Learning to fly was mildly interesting to Miss Geziah Strong, one of the younger set of Cleveland's socially prominent, but for a real thrill, she took up parachute jumping.

Miss Strong was excellent as a student flier. Slightly hampered by social obligations and months spent in Europe and Florida, she managed to make her first solo flight. She now has more than five hours of solo flying to her credit.

As she developed her aerial technique, Mrs. Strong was urged by the desire to step from a plane into space. Accompanied by an expert parachute jumper, she went aloft. At 3,000 feet, she stepped from the plane's cabin.

Back in 1897 and 1898, when the Alaskan gold rush was at its height, a girl named Mollie Walsh ran a tent-restaurant at the headwaters of the Yukon and became famous as the "Map-Jack queen." A miner named John "Eckler Jack" Newman loved her, but she spurned him for one Mike Bartlett, whom she married. Three years later Bartlett cut her throat; now Newman, a retired Seattle business man, is donating a statue of her to the city of Skagway. He is shown here with the statue.

OCTOBER
The trees will be vivid in their autumnal dresses.
The trees will be happy in their golden gowns.
We feel that nature's mother hand caresses
Each woodland spot before the winter frowns.
The trees to be thrilling in their Autumn wonder.
And it brings comfort to our soul to know
That every leaf will have its bit of beauty.
Before it goes to sleep beneath the snow.
So life is to the brave—the heart remembers
October's gallantry and thrilling song.
Although youth's fire must turn, at last, to embers.
Although the winter time is chill, and long
The wind brings color to each gay leaf's face
Before that leaf is wafted from its place.—Selected.

COTTON TRADE

The past week said that recent offerings showed indications of some of the lower grades appearing on account of rains in certain areas.

Premium staple cottons were said to have improved but little in demand with only a small business transacted. According to the Weather Bureau, during the past week heavy rains occurred in some localities in Mississippi with progress in picking and ginning mostly poor.

Southern mill centers reported but little activity in raw cotton with inquiries centered mostly on cottons in the grades of white Middling 7-8 inch 15-16 inch and to bright low grades.

New England mill centers said that the basis for short cottons as well as the premiums for staple cottons were but little changed compared with those of the past week. It was said that substantial increases in operations in almost all of the New Bedford mills had been recently effected. Some mills were said to have taken on considerable new business.

Dry goods centers were quite optimistic in their reports and from some centers came reports of very sizeable transactions in certain constructions at increased quotations. For a great many of the leading print cloth centers it was said that open orders are in excess of stocks.

Foreign markets said that demand for American cotton was not very good.

Memory Returns
It was springtime in Bradenton. The Athletics were playing the Cardinals. On the slab for the Cardinals was a young left-hander named Bill Hallahan. I sat on the bench with Gabby Street, who was then having his first experiences as manager of the Cards. The conversation was something like this:
"How is this Hallahan?"
"Good pitcher, lot of stuff, and going to get better as he goes along."
"Nice fast ball?"
"Nice fast ball? Yes, and nice everything else. All he needs is a little confidence. He'll get that as he goes along. I told him the other day he was a good pitcher. And that he was going to do plenty for the Cards and for himself this year. And he was going to stay in there, in the pen, and pitch his own ball game. And he'll do it, you bet."

A Great Pitcher
GABBY'S words have been borne out to the letter. The other day in New York, Gabby gave Sports Writer Bill Corum an interview in which he repeated his words of the springtime.
"I told Hallahan," said Gabby, "that I couldn't make him a great pitcher because he was already that. But I told him that he was going to make me a successful manager."

Frisch and Cobb
BASEBALL managers are of two schools. Some are graduated with the degree of Doctor of Blarney. Others leave school with a Bachelor of Bear Stories diploma. When Gabby starts talking about Second Baseman Frankie Frisch, in the same breath with Ty Cobb, you hardly know to which of the schools Gabby belongs.
"Frisch leave his feet about half way between first and second and go sliding head first into the bag in a cloud of dust? If you have, then Gabby's talk about Cobb and Frisch doesn't sound so silly. But then, of course, we would have to cast one vote for Cobb, in any comparison of the two. Oh my, yes!"

The liquor manufactured by Miller, not only was the best analyzed from the state of South Dakota but from the six states the Minneapolis office serves, Williams declared.

Nick and Al Were There

A world series wouldn't be official without Nick and Al—and here we present Messrs. Alcock and Schacht, baseball comedians de luxe. Of course, Nick and Al had to entertain the crowds at Philadelphia, and they did with their burlesque boxing match. As you might suspect, Nick is the bird who seems to be hiding his face in one of Al's boxing stances. Below are the mascots of the Cardinals and Athletics, Joseph (Lefty) Conkist, left, and Louis Festa, right.

DID YOU KNOW THAT—
PROFESSOR WALTER B. PITKIN of Columbia University has written a book, "The Psychology of Achievement," in which he decries Babe Ruth's baseball achievements as due to "an amazing basal metabolism." In explanation, the professor says, "the Babe, for many years, has eaten about 10 meals a day, and his radiant heat is so intense that he cannot wear even the lightest underwear on the coldest day in winter." ... and we had been thinking all this time that Babe never ate more than nine meals per diem! ... If the Babe gets his home runs by eating 10 meals a day, I wonder how they ever manage to keep Hack Wilson fed up—and Hack must be so hot that his baseball uniform is likely to burst into flames any day now.

Gabby is serious about it, however.
"Frankie Frisch has done everything this season," says Gabby, "that I ever saw Ty Cobb do. I don't think there is much to choose between those two. You know that Frisch reminds me of Cobb a lot." As you know that is what Major Hoople might say in riddling one's palate of a plethora of syllables. The memory of Ty Cobb is nothing to fool with.

Many in "Who's Who"
ROCHESTER, Minn.—(UP)—More Rochester citizens are listed in "Who's Who" than are listed for any other city of its size, it was revealed here. Twenty prominent residents were honored by inclusion in the book. Sixteen are physicians of the Mayo clinic.

And It Still Runs

HAMBURG, Iowa, Oct. 6.—(UP)—More than a year ago, O. W. Westad, of near here, dropped a watch from his pocket while he was plowing corn. The watch was valued because it had been brought to this country 154 years ago by Westad's great great grandfather and had been in his immediate possession for 28 years. When plowing was begun this year, Westad found the watch in the field. He re-wound it and it has been running regularly since, he says, apparently none the worse for the year of exposure.

Cat Is Wary Animal

GENEVA, Ohio, Oct. 6.—(UP)—Geneva boasts a sox-toed cat, veteran of two automobile accidents, who even keeps a wary eye on things while he sleeps. His mistress calls him Richard but he's "Pop Eye" to the neighbors. He has six toes on each of his four feet. Statisticians credit him with only seven lives now. He's been run over twice in convincing fashion. The habit of sleeping with one eye open, neighbors state, was acquired following Richard's second tiff with an automobile.

Visitors Leave Car

LOGAN, Ohio, Oct. 6.—(UP)—Guy Jackson, of Good Hope Township, entertained visitors at his chicken roost one night recently. He was not there to receive them but he saw them off. They turned down a blind road, turning around and started back, running into his machine. The men fled and left Jackson his chickens, with neatly wrung necks, and their automobile.

For all we ever hear of his relatives, Connie Mack might be all alone in the world with his baseball players. But such isn't the case, for here have Connie photographed with his two sons, Connie, Jr., left, and Earl, right. Connie, Jr., is still a school boy and Earl is a coach with the A's. It was natural that they should be photographed at the world series with a baseball dugout in the background.

FELT SHE WAS GETTING WEAKER

Health Seemed To Be Going Downhill—Says Cardui Helped Her Get Well.

Dothan, Ala.—"About nine years ago, I was in very bad health," says Mrs. G. S. Camp, 713 Adams Street, this city.
"I had been going downhill some time, until I found myself so weak I could not keep going. I had to give up and go to bed. I layed six weeks, flat on my back. I could hardly lift my hand for weakness. I worried a lot about myself for I could see that I was not doing any good. I tried this thing and then another, but nothing helped me. I could feel myself getting weaker all the time and I suffered constantly with severe pain in my side.
"A friend asked me why I did not try Cardui. I was impressed with the suggestion, and at last began to take it. It was not long until I began to improve. Strength returned and the dreaded pain in my side left entirely. I was delighted with this, so I went on with the medicine for some time—long enough to be sure my gain was permanent."

BEGIN HERE TODAY

After her by force, it necessary, Celia Mitchell, 17, when she learns the father she has supposed dead is alive and wealthy, she leaves her apprenticeship home in Baltimore for a home in New York with her father, utility Mitchell, and her mysterious grandmother.

WARRANT ROBBERS, her mother, divorced Mitchell, remarried and is now a widow. BALTIMORE, Md., young newspaper photographer is in love with the girl and before leaving Baltimore Celia promised to be loyal to his love.

She is lonely in her new home. Mitchell's sister EVELYN PARSONS, beautiful widow, to introduce the girl to other young people. Mrs. Parsons considers Celia a means to win Mitchell's affections and never the father the girl to her long island home for a week-end.

TOO JORDAN, fascinating but with a dubious reputation, is attentive to Celia. Mitchell joins the house party on Sunday. Mrs. Parsons, seeing the girl and daughter together, becomes jealous. She tells Mitchell her pearls are missing and casts suspicion on Celia.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXI

"Oh!" Evelyn's hand flew to her mouth. "Oh! I didn't think I mean it couldn't have been!"

Mitchell eyed her gravely. "You say you're sure you had the necklace yesterday?"

"Yes," Mrs. Parsons nodded emphatically. "It was before the others arrived. I was showing Celia about the grounds and the house and then I thought she might like to see the view from the windows of my room. It's quite unusual. We went upstairs, and while we were there Rose, my maid, came in with the pearls. They'd just come back from a shop where I sent them to have the clasp repaired. I remember I put them down."

She stopped and the shocked expression on her face deepened. "No, no!" Mrs. Parsons went on. "Of course it couldn't have been—" "But Celia was with you when you put them away?"

The woman nodded slowly as though she dreaded the admission. "I've looked everywhere," she said.

She was an excellent actress. Evelyn Parsons' expression and tone of voice both protested against this horrifying truth.

"We must investigate this thing at once," Mitchell said firmly. "I'll call Celia."

"Oh, please! No!" Mrs. Parsons begged. "I couldn't do such a thing. I mean I won't believe—" "It's the only way to put the matter straight," the man insisted. "My daughter's name must be cleared."

He was interrupted by Lisl Duncan. She came dancing into the hallway of the living room.

"Oh, Mr. Mitchell! Lisl cried, 'I've been looking for you! Come on—you have to be my partner. The others are all making fun of me and I won't have it!'"

She had caught Mitchell's arm and seemed determined to pull him after her by force. It necessary, "Come along!" Lisl demanded. "They're all ready to start. And I won't be without a partner. Come along!"

CASTING back protesting glances at Evelyn, Mitchell was led away. The widow, alone, tapped one foot angrily and bided her time.

She was still standing in the hallway when Celia Mitchell appeared rounding the curve of the stairway. Her face was pale. As soon as Celia saw Mrs. Parsons she ran down the remaining steps.

"Oh, Mrs. Parsons," Celia said. "The queerest thing has happened. I can't understand it! I went upstairs a while ago to see that all my things were packed and ready to leave. I was putting a pair of hose I'd forgotten into my traveling bag when I found this. Look—!"

She held up the dazzling strand of pearls.

"Why, Celia!"

"It's the beautiful necklace you showed me yesterday. Isn't it? But how in the world did it get into my traveling bag?"

Evelyn Parsons' face was burning. For a moment her pale cheeks were flushed. A queer muffled sound issued from her throat. Then she recaptured command of the situation.

"In your traveling bag?" she echoed. "Why—how curious!"

Celia's cheeks were still white. "Mrs. Parsons, you wouldn't think you couldn't think—I mean I didn't put them there! It must have been that someone meant to—take your necklace!"

Evelyn was holding the pearls in her hand. Now she looked down at them.

"There must be something more to this," she told Celia slowly. "I wonder."

"But why would anyone hide the pearls in my bag?"

Evelyn Parsons had been thinking quickly.

"Listen, Celia," she said. "I think perhaps I know what happened. I can't tell you about it now, but I'm going to be watchful. You must promise me not to say one word about this to anyone. I have my reasons."

Celia agreed. "I won't mention it to a soul," she said. "Only it makes me feel dreadful!"

"Never mind. Run along and forget all about it."

Celia went out to join the crowd on the porch. Mrs. Parsons turned to mount the stairs. She hesitated on the first step, her face thoughtful. She was about to continue when she heard footsteps. John Mitchell appeared.

"Evelyn—you've found them?"

She had forgotten that she was holding the pearls.

"Why—why, yes."

"Oh, I'm so glad. You don't know how upset I've been. It was such a terrible thing—"

"There, there, John! You see it's all right. Yes, I found the pearls. I—I went upstairs again and made another search. And anyway, you know I didn't believe for a single minute that your daughter had anything to do with their disappearance."

Mitchell smiled. Evelyn Parsons, standing above him, looked every thing that was womanly and sweet. The man's eyes raised to hers.

"You wouldn't?" he said fervently. "Evelyn, I hope she'll be as true a woman as you are."

She excused herself and went on upstairs to put away the necklace. The plan had not worked. Never mind, there would be other ways! When Celia reached the porch she found that the group there had diminished. Lisl with Jimmie Webster and Walter Carr was displaying card tricks. The others were not in sight.

THE moonlight was as glamorous as it had been the night before. Celia walked over to the porch railing, seated herself and leaned her head back.

Celia's eyes opened. Someone was coming along the garden path. A man and a woman. From the shadows of the porch Celia could see them clearly, but they could not see her.

They walked very slowly, close together, the man's arm about the woman.

Celia shrank back, but in that instant she had recognized them. Jordan and Eve Brooks!

Eve Brooks was a married woman. She had no right to be flirting as she did with any man in sight. But Jordan—Celia winced. He had tried to make Celia believe he cared for her. He had said it in words and in a thousand other ways.

Celia kept to her hidden recess. She could not bear to let the others know she had seen them.

Music from a distant radio studio began to pour forth from the living room. Two couples began dancing. Celia arose and started to enter, but Walter Carr detained her.

"Dance this one with me, won't you?" he said.

They danced and Celia carried her head very proudly. She laughed more at Carr's jokes than she had before. Then Courtney Brooks came from somewhere and asked her to dance with him. Brooks was an expert at the tango. He showed her some of the steps and Celia, though she was slow at learning, was laughing and her cheeks were flushed when at last she gave up the attempt.

Ted Jordan stepped beside her. "I've been waiting for you," he said.

For a moment Celia was about to frame an excuse. Then she thought better of it, raised her arms and let him lead her into a fox trot.

Drouth Won't Prevent Corn Husking Contest

TOPEKA, Kan., Oct. 6.—(AP)—Plenty of cornfields are available for husking contests this fall despite the summer's drouth, says Raymond Gilkeson, manager of the Kansas state and national contests.

"After a trip in Kansas, Gilkeson said he had received offers of numerous fields that would produce from 50 to 75 bushels of corn to the acre. Fields will be selected for the contests soon, and Gilkeson hopes to hold the state and national husking bees in different parts of the state.

New Culture Aids 'Biggest' Celery Farm

"Banking" long rows of celery (top) on the "world's largest" single celery farm near Stockton, California, is followed by harvesting (lower left) and packing (lower right.)

STOCKTON, Cal. (AP)—More than a square mile of celery in a single bed—approximately 21,450,000 bunches in all—and each one planted by hand.

That comprises what is called the world's largest individual celery farm. This, acreage furthermore, is more than doubled by nearby tracts also controlled by J. C. Maurer and his four sons near here.

If all celery plants grown by father and sons were in a single row, spaced the customary six inches, it would stretch more than 7,180 miles—more than twice the distance across the continent.

In 40 years, Maurer accumulated some ideas about how celery could be grown in California. They were rather unique and wholly theoretical, but he was eager to try them.

Five years ago he succeeded in interesting his sons in a western migration. Two abandoned college careers to participate in the family venture. They started with 140 acres and added to it yearly, yet the achievement is more one of innovation and method than of mere magnitude.

Unlike New York, Michigan or other celery-producing areas, rains cannot be expected at planting time, so keep plants alive in the transplanting season in the San Joaquin valley.

So the Maurers adopted a method of flooding land under six inches to a foot of water. The soil is peat sediment, so trenching has to be done when the ground is so soft that horses frequently bog.

After much experimentation, an average of 120 crates per acre has been achieved for the farm as a whole, with 250 crates an acre for some of the tract.

Through improved methods of culture, blanching and packing, the California product is able to compete in the New York market—the world's largest for celery—despite the long freight haul.

More than 8,000 acres are harvested in the delta region of California, where a few years ago none was grown.

Fall Selection of Seed Corn Is Urged

Seed Selected in Fall Will Save Many Dollars to Farmers in Spring

Selection of seed corn this fall by every farmer in Hempstead county who has corn which will be for seed is being urged by Lynn Smith, county agent. A little caution exercised at this time of year in the matter of getting seed corn for next spring may save several dollars which it may be necessary to use in buying seed, and also insure having a better quality of seed. Following are some statements from our Experiment Stations relative to the value of our home grown seed with that brought in from other states:

"The Arkansas Experiment Station has proved that most of the varieties of corn widely grown in Arkansas are well adapted to Arkansas conditions and that it is safer to rely on our standard local varieties than to go a long distance for seed. For this reason it is highly economical for a farmer to save his own seed corn this fall, even if his corn is making only small proportion of a normal crop.

"Field selection of seed corn from a field which has suffered from drouth makes it impossible to get seed which have a higher degree of drouth resistance than is possible in a normal year, because the ears selected will come from stalks which had the highest degree of drouth resistance. Even if the ears are not as good as we usually look for, we may be sure the seed is from strong, hardy stalks.

"This year it will not be advisable to look for fancy characteristics of stalk and ear as the cause in a corn season. The important thing to look for is a yield of grain that is better than the yield from the majority of stalks. Of course, the grains should be sound and well developed. After all the biggest thing to observe in selecting seed corn is the relative yield of sound corn per stalk.

Blevins Defeats Amity 7-6, Friday

Score Is Made in the Last Three Minutes of the Game

The Blevins football team is off to a good start. After losing their first game to a heavier Dierks team they came back last Friday to defeat Amity 7-6 on the Amity field.

Amity having fought Arkadelphia in a standstill this week before, the local boys were expecting a hard fight, and their expectations were realized. From scrimmage Amity gained much more ground than Blevins, making an even dozen first downs to three for Blevins. Blevins had them badly outclassed in the kicking department however. Time after time Bruce, punting for Blevins, sent the ball far into Amity territory, making them waste their punch at the wrong end of the field.

Both teams scored on a break. Late in the final quarter Amity got the ball on Blevins' three yard line by completing a pass in a lucky manner. Brown, Blevins' quarterback, knocked the pass down but it fell in the hands of a receiver. From this position three line plays failed to gain, but on the fourth down they out-guessed the local boys and went around left end for a touchdown. The kick for extra point was blocked, leaving the score six to nothing in favor of Amity.

With only three minutes left to play Gorbam, playing defensive half-back for Blevins, intercepted an Amity pass and raced forty yards for a touchdown, with half a dozen potential tacklers in close pursuit. A cleverly executed fake pick with Brown going over guard gave Blevins the final and deciding point of the game. It would have been smart play if executed by a much more experienced team, and it left the Amity team bewildered.

The final minutes of the game found Amity passing recklessly in a fruitless attempt to score. The game ended with Blevins in possession of the ball deep in Amity's territory. It was an especially delightful victory for Mr. Lay coach of the Blevins team, as Amity is his home town and he was able to give a good account of himself there.

Chemical Found to Kill Pests of Peach Orchards

CORNELIA, Ga., Oct. 6.—(AP)—Entomologists have found an effective remedy for the peach borer—Paradichlorobenzene.

The preparation, says Oliver I. Sapp of the United States department of agriculture, can be used safely on three four years old or older. Three-fourths of an ounce of the chemical applied in a one-inch band around the trunk of a tree will prove effective in eliminating the most destructive of peach tree pests, he declares.

Paradichlorobenzene should be used in the fall months. Experiments with it were conducted by Charles H. Allen, entomologist at the Georgia fruit pest and parasite laboratory here.

Wheat Better Than Corn For Shoats, Test Shows

LEXINGTON, Ky., Oct. 6.—(AP)—Wheat is superior to corn as feed for young hogs, tests at the University of Kentucky show.

One hundred-pound shoats were fed a slop made of 14 parts ground wheat, soaked 24 hours, and one part of tankage, and gained 1.78 pounds daily, according to Prof. E. S. Good, head of the animal husbandry department, who conducted the experiments.

These tests show, he pointed out, that 60 pounds of wheat produced 16.69 pounds of pork. Pigs also did well on whole soaked wheat, he said, where fed in a small lot and kept a little hungry so they ate undigested kernels. Tankage should be added, however, where the wheat is fed ground or whole.

Building A Community

A Short Story of the Growth of Blevins, Hempstead County, Arkansas. Once a Resting Point For a Stage Line, on the Old Military Road Across the State

BY ERLE C. TURNER

Arkansas history tells us that Hempstead county was one of the original five counties named in the state. The Hempstead county of those days, however, is not the Hempstead county of today. In 1803 when those counties were named the territory allotted to Hempstead county covered what is now Howard, Little River, Miller, Lafayette, Nevada and Columbia counties.

As time passed the above named counties were formed and given boundary lines of their own by which they are known today.

The first roads of the county were not really roads but trails used by the primitive ox carts and earliest inhabitants in crossing the state. Along these trails the first civilization of Southwest Arkansas began to locate.

One such road, known years later, even in places today, as the old military road, between Little Rock and Texarkana, passed through the north portion of Hempstead county. This road, from the time it was blazed through the timber until recent years, was the main road through this section of the state. Leaving Little Rock it came through Hot Springs, and on till it struck the Hempstead county line to Washington, and on to Fulton, where travelers were taken across the treacherous Red River, by means of the famous Fulton ferry.

With the settling of the country and the coming of stage coaches settlements were formed along the route, where travelers might take meals, spend the night or seek refuge from times of bad weather. One such "stage stand," was established by a family was known as the "Blevins here the town of Blevins, Hempstead County, Arkansas stands today.

The original home of the Blevins family was known as the "Blevins Stage Stand," an was known for miles for hospitality, according to strangers and for the good meals and good water travelers could obtain there. This old log building still stands, a reminder to the pioneers who erected it and to the many notable characters who have spent a night or eaten a meal under its roof. Built of logs, without a nail in it, held together with wooden pins, this building is estimated by many citizens to be more than a hundred years old.

This building and grounds was purchased about five years ago by Mr. J. W. Burke, only recently some repair was done on it as a means of preservation and of course nails were used as the more modern age have forgotten the use of wooden pins, known only to our forefathers.

It is said that under this roof David Crockett and many other characters listed in the early history of our country.

Our Poultry Column

Edited by
Prof. Frederic H. Stoneburn

Without charge, our readers may secure expert personal advice on poultry topics. Address: Editor, The Arkansas Star, Hope, Ark. State your problem fully; enclose stamped self-addressed envelope.

During a recent gathering of experienced poultrymen we developed a discussion of the more common errors in the management of laying birds throughout the Southern States. It was the consensus of opinion that there are four outstanding factors having a big effect upon the egg yield, one or more of which are overlooked or neglected—large proportion of our poultry keepers; that the correction of such errors will in practically all cases cause a big increase in the output of eggs and, consequently, in the profits.

These errors are the use of feeds of inferior quality, too scanty feeding, neglect of the water supply and failure to provide grit and oyster shell.

CONSIDER this matter of feed quality. Our domestic fowls are regarded as being the most efficient machines for converting raw material, feed, into a valuable finished product, eggs. The quantity and to a great extent, the quality of this finished product depends upon the character of the raw material supplied the machines. If really good results are to be secured the feed given the layers must provide all the materials they need for making eggs. This is a matter of the proper balance or proportion of the various feed-stuffs used. The absence of only one of the many essential elements is "a limiting factor" which checks production.

Next is the matter of the quality of the ingredients. If low-grade materials are fed, the birds are improperly nourished, and are compelled to "work over" a lot of waste stuff in order to secure the required amount of egg-making material. This again reduces the flock output and cuts down profits.

Since good layers consume such relatively small amounts of feed as compared with their production, one is justified in paying any reasonable price to secure high quality, result-producing rations. Heavy-laying hens when liberally fed will consume roughly forty pounds of egg mash per year. Therefore, a ton of mash will meet the annual mash requirements of fifty layers. A difference of $5.00 per ton in the cost of mash represents but 10c per bird during the year, yet this amount, wisely invested, may mean a difference of one or more dozens of eggs per layer. High quality, correctly balanced poultry rations are always a wise investment.

THE fallacy of under feeding is easily understood. When owners of laying flocks put their birds on short rations, try to cut feed costs by reducing the quality of feed supplied, they invariably lose far more than they gain. An empty feed trough simply means empty nests.

In order to produce eggs the layers must eat, digest and assimilate feed. From no other source can they secure the egg-making materials. Now it logically follows that if they are to lay large numbers of eggs they must convert large quantities of feed into albumen, yolk and shell. The wise try passed one or more nights as they passed along the old military trail through the state.

The Ozan Lumber Company, one of the largest of the early mill companies were located at Prescott then a small mill town. In 1897 this company ran a railroad track from Prescott to where the old military road passed through north Hempstead county, now Blevins. This road was used by the mill company to haul logs to their mill at Prescott and H. E. Bemis of that city was head of the company.

In 1899 the late Edgar Wells and P. C. Stephens built the first store in north Hempstead county. Their stock consisted of general merchandise, hardware, coal, oil, ammunition and chewing, smoking and dipping. This community store really marked the beginning of Blevins, for Mr. Wells soon bought the "old Blevins stage stand" and folks began to drift in and settle near the Wells-Stephens store.

Among the pioneers who settled within a short distance of where Blevins today were: J. W. Burke, Wiley Duckett, Charles Bruce, Martin Hendricks, Bill Bittick, H. G. Austin, Thomas Mullin, K. B. Spear and others.

Being that the community had a general store the citizens of the neighborhood decided that a school, a church and other improvements were needed. About a mile or a little more away, toward the south was a community called the Marvin neighborhood. Here a church was established in 1900 however this church was moved to Blevins. The same year a school was established. Mr. W. S. Duckett, for the convenience of the farmers purchased and erected a cotton gin and the little town began to thrive. (To Be Continued)

Ohio Farmers May Quit Poor Land After Drouth

COLUMBUS, O., Oct. 6.—(AP)—Abandonment of some farms in Ohio will follow the drouth, according to the Ohio farm bureau corporation.

If farmers in poor farming sections transfer to better locations, the drouth will be viewed as a benefit. In southern Ohio, where the effect was the worst, there have been three consecutive crop failures, the corporation said, dry weather this year following two years of too much rain.

Man-Made Flood to Take Town, 1400 Farms

Linn Creek, a Missouri village (center, left), is to be inundated by the lake formed by the Bagnell dam on the Osage river (above). The map shows the size of the lake in comparison to the state, while work already accomplished on the project is shown lower left.

BAGNELL, Mo. (AP)—Water 60 feet deep soon is to cover a Missouri town once populated by 550 persons. The village, Linn Creek, will be inundated by the Lake of the Ozarks, which will be formed next spring when Bagnell Dam, now under construction here, starts holding back the water of the Osage river.

The dam and the lake it will form are part of a $70,000,000 water project undertaken by the Union Electric Light and Power company, a midwest utility.

With a third of the work completed, the water power project is expected to be finished in September, 1931. Power will be furnished to St. Louis and surrounding area.

Initial capacity of the dam will be 211,000 horsepower, with additional facilities to increase the output to 278,000 later.

Eight generators of 35,500 horsepower each will be operated. The dam is to be 140 feet above rock bottom. Water above it will be 108 feet higher than the level below it.

A concrete road, state highway No. 54, will be atop the structure. The dam will be of solid concrete with a spillway 480 feet long and 12 floodgates to regulate the flow during high water.

The lake will cover 60,000 acres and will be 140 miles long, with a varying width. The minimum width will be one-half mile at the dam and the maximum approximately six miles. The shoreline is to total 2,450 miles.

Citizens of Linn Creek are to move their town, but so far they have been unable to agree on a new site. The village, county seat of Camden county, consists of about 100 buildings. Most of the properties have been bought outright by the electric company, and structures will be destroyed or moved. The courthouse has been the subject of litigation, but little other difficulty has been experienced.

At Warsaw 50 buildings and two miles of railroad must be moved. Two bridges are to be built there to cross narrow stretches of the lake. Throughout the area of the lake 100 miles of roads, together with several small bridges, are to be relocated and rebuilt.
